Dear Roy:

I appreciate your invitation to participate in the colloquium in November. While other commitments at that time will not permit me to attend the entire conference, I would like to participate in at least one session. I would be available to attend either the first session on intelligence in the Oval Office or Dick Pipes' session on intelligence in the formation of foreign policy. Why don't you give me a recommendation on where you think I might make the best contribution and I will plan to attend that session.

Again, thanks for the invitation. I look forward to participating albeit in a limited way, and hope that you will be able to provide me with whatever report emerges from the colloquium as a whole.

Sincerely,

Dear Bob,

As you may know, since 1979 the Consortium for the Study of Intelligence has been engaged in the study of future US intelligence requirements, as well as encouraging teaching and research on the subject in American universities.

To this end, we have organized six policy-oriented research colloquia on major aspects of intelligence. The meetings have brought together a select group of scholars, intelligence specialists, current and former senior intelligence officers and policymakers from the United States and abroad to examine and discuss specially prepared papers on ways of improving US intelligence. The edited papers and synopses of the discussions of each colloquium have been published in the series, Intelligence Requirements for the 1980's (Elements of Intelligence, Analysis and Estimates, Counterintelligence, Covert Action, Clandestine Collection).

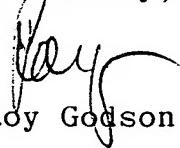

Our next colloquium will address the nature of the working relationship between US policy and intelligence. Given the significance of the subject and the scrutiny to which it will be subjected during the coming years, the Consortium will hold a two-day meeting on Friday and Saturday, November 9 and 10, 1984, at the International Club here in Washington, to begin to examine this relationship. An outline of the program is enclosed.

I am writing to ask if you can join us for the meeting as your expertise and interest in the subject will be a decided asset to the colloquium. If you can attend, we will provide you with further relevant information prior to the meeting.

I very much hope that you will be able to accept.

Sincerely,

Roy Godson
